Snowmobiling season typically runs from early December through mid April. The lakes generally are frozen by Christmas. January through mid April is generally considered to be the best time. Temperatures at this time of year usually range from lows near zero to daytime highs in the mid twenties. Most days are sunny. The terrain is quite variable, ranging from flat to gently rolling sagebrush prairie to very rugged forested mountains. The elevation is about 7000 feet, but many trails are over 10,000 feet.

Timberline Lodge can arrange a horse drawn sleigh that takes you for a ride onto the National Elk Refuge, you will find yourself in the middle of an adventure unlike any other. This almost century long tradition continues to be a one of a kind wildlife activity. It's an amazing and exciting way to discover first hand new things about the area's wildlife. As you venture across the Refuge to the sounds of snow crunching beneath the horses' feet, you will encounter sights that can only be found on the National Elk Refuge.
